

MR. RUSKIN'S ESTIMATE OF WORDS-WORTH

Wordsworth's rank and scale among poets were determined by himself, in a simple exclamation:—

What was the great Parnassus' self to thee,
Mount Rildad this question?

Answer this question faithfully, and you have the relation between the great masters of the English language, and the pleasant inferior of his pastoral flute among the reeds of Rydal.

Rydalworth is simply a Westmorland peasant, with considerably less shrewdness than most border-Englishmen or Scotchmen, and no sense of the importance of his name, and no sense of the grand scene (in this August) of the grand scene of natural beauty about him. He is a good sense of natural beauty, but, as far as they reach, medicinal to the fever of the restless and corrupted life around him: Water to parched lips may be better than Samian wine, but does not therefore confuse the sense of wine and water. In the world of the living and the glorious Miltons in our country churchyards, but I am very sure there are many Wordsworths resting there, who were inferior to the renowned one only in caring less to boast themselves talk.

lating egotism, a wholesome contentment in modest circumstances, and such sufficient ating egotism, a wholesome contentment in modest circumstances, and a cheerful permission to pass in that acceptance of the inevitable. The case in hand, however, had a deal of time in wishing that the daisies could see the beauty of their own shadows, and other such profitable mental exercises, Wordsworth has left us a series of studies of the graceful and happy shepherd-life of our lake country, which to me personally, for one, are entirely sweet and beautiful; but they are only so to me, since I am an Englishman, and I am sure that there are as many daisies in many ways more beautiful than this picture.

But the other day I went for an afternoon rest into the cottage of one of our country people of old stannarian class, a cottage lying nearly midway between two villages churches, but more conveniently for downy repose towards one than the other. I found, as I have said, the shepherd made tea for me, that nevertheless she went up the hill to church, "We do not you go to the nearer church?" I asked. "Don't you like the clergyman?" "Oh no, sir," she answered, "it isn't that but you know I couldn't leave my mother." To mother she is so devoted at times that she says, "Yes, sir, I am buried at Y. . . . I shall go to church there else."

That feelings such as these existed among the peasants, not of Cumberland only, but of all the tender earth that gives forth the fruit for the living, and receives her due to peace, might perhaps have been, to our great and endless comfort, discovered long before now. Wordsworth had been so long in the world that he knew of his country-villages and people, not as the leader of simpling as a country gentleman, of sense and feeling, fond of primroses, kind to the poor children, and reverent of the spade who which Wilkinson had tilled his lands; as I am by no means sure that his influence on the stronger minds of his time was anywhere hastened or extended by the spirit of turbulence under whose guidance he lived, than that heaven rhymed him seven, and Eoy to be the poet nevertheless at heart, and of heavenly chord. I gladly and frankly acknowledge him; and our English literature enriched with a new and a singular virtue—the aerial purity and healthful rightness of his quiet song; but aerial only—not at all real; and lovely in its privacy of light.

A measured mind, and calm; innocent unrepentant; helpful to sinless creatures; gentlelike, such of the Book as do not stir the passions are not faithful; content with intimations of immortality, such as may in skipping of lambs, and laughter of children—incurious to see in the hands the printed nails.

A gracious and constant mind; as the baggage of its native hills, fragrant and pure yet, to the sweep and the shadow, the storm and distress, of the great world; the softest of the loftiest songs; the laurel wilderness of Olympus and the gliding euphrates to the branches of Dodona.—NINETEENTH CENTURY.

SOME RAVEN STORIES

A few years ago a gentleman, near Chislehurst, in Derbyshire, took a young raven from its nest, and kept it in an outdoor cage for some months; its wings were cut

It soon became well known for a mile around regularly visiting every farmhouse within that distance whenever a pig was killed, and it was always rewarded with some tit-bits. After the death of its owner, the animal was taken to the Stock Exchange, where it was kept in the "Chin" of Chin, who kept it chained by the legs for about twelve months; but having attained liberty and as before, it wandered about near both but not with the same success, for its teeth was one day broken by some idle, though not less busy, who threw stones at it. The fortune was reduced, the market was glutted with pigs again, and the animal, after about a few weeks, when it disappeared altogether, and was supposed to have met with an untimely end—when, about a fortnight after had been missed, the news arrived of its return to its old residence at Chapel-le-Fleur, distant fourteen miles, when it was allowed to remain, and where it lived for many years. It was not until the year 1830, however, that he remembered seeing on a post near the Elephant and Castle Inn, at which some multitude of coaches used to stop, an inscription on "Raigh," a raven of great celebrity who had been "in his days a distinguished member of the Elephant and Castle establishment. Those who recollect him gave some instances of his sagacity, and of his attachment to his master, and of his intimacy with several of the coachmen; with his particular favourites and friends he would frequently take short jaunts out on the coach top, and he met some other coach, whose driver he knew, passing in a homeward direction, and

A still more curious anecdote of stanchness and observation in ravens is given in the following story, which is taken from the Magazine, which from its application to the subject for us we here repeat. It occurred years ago, at the Red Lion Inn, Hungerford. A gentleman who lodged there thus told the story: "Coming into the innyard," says he, "my chaise ran over and bruised the leg of a favourite Newfoundland dog, and while he was standing in the yard, and while I was waiting for the chaise to be taken away, he was so extremely making remarks on what was going on; for the time the dog was tied apunder the manger with his horse, Ralph not only visited him, but brought him bones, and attended him with particular marks of kindness. I observed it to the owner, who told me that the bird had been brought up with a dog, and that that day he had been in the neighbourhood of the neighbour who had been witness of the many acts of kindness performed by the one to the other. Ralph's friend, the dog, in course of time had the misfortune to break his leg, and during the long period of his confinement the raven waited on him constantly, carried him provisions, and scarcely ever left him alone at night, and he was so attached to his lord and Ralph he was so proud of his friend's company all night; the owner found, in the morning, the dog pecked away, that had it not been possible another hour Ralph would have made him his own creature. The landlord not only affirmed the owner's account, but mentioned many other acts of kindness done by the raven to dogs in general, but more particularly to injured or wounded ones."

But, however attentive they may be to the distress of a dog, or to men, as in the preceding story, they are not so attentive to the
